

"They can forget it": Greenpeace just made two surprising new enemies

Saguenay, Quebec mayor Jean Tremblay's video calling Greenpeace "a bunch of job killers" is getting lots of attention.

Greenpeace claims the lumber industry is destroying the region's boreal forest, but in his viral video, Tremblay shows that this is junk science.

Even the Liberal premier of Quebec is joining the anti-Greenpeace chorus.

Philippe Couillard says if Greenpeace thinks they're going to destroy his province's forestry industry, "They can forget it."

This is incredible. This isn't Alberta or British Columbia. It's Quebec, one of the most progressive provinces, pushing back against the multinational, foreign funded lobbyists at Greenpeace.

(PS: I've got an embarrassing question for Greenpeace about cleaning up their own environmental messes.)

JOIN TheRebel.media for more news and commentary you won't find anywhere else.

READ Ezra Levant's two bestselling books debunking environmentalist propaganda:

Ethical Oil: The Case for Canada's Oil Sands