

India kicks out Greenpeace for fraud

Canada just elected our Greenpeace government. Meanwhile, India just ordered Greenpeace to shut down over fraud.

Greenpeace has declared war on India's economy, trying to shut down industrial developments. Opposing coal mines; opposing nuclear power too. So, pretty much opposing any electricity for India.

Yeah, that's cute when Greenpeace tells Canadians to turn off the lights when we're not in the room. But it's less cute when they want to sentence hundreds of millions of poor Indians to a life of poverty.

So maybe India, which isn't part of NATO, paid attention to the NATO secretary general last year, when he said he had evidence that foreign powers like Russia had infiltrated environmental NGOs to use them as economic weapons against Putin's foes.

We're too rich or too stupid to take steps against groups like Greenpeace who are always attacking our industries. India doesn't have that luxury, so they're kicking Greenpeace out.
